Italy Probes Leak of Report Next Move Is On Illegal Private Armies

By Paul Hofmann

ROME, April 18 (NYT),-The government is investigaling the leak of a secret report by its chief representative in Milan on illegal private armies organized by leftist and neo-Fascist ex-

Photocopies of the document were published by rightist news-papers here and in Mlian during the weekend causing a furor among Communists and Socialists.

In the report, Libero Mazza, prefect of Milan, the officer representing the central government in Italy's second city, in-formed the Interior Ministry in Rome that 20,000 extremists were organized in paramilitary forma-

Independent estimates have recently placed the number of extremist militants in clandestine groups of all political brands throughout Italy at between 50,-000 and 80,000.

Impotence Regrefted

Mr. Mazza, a career civil servant, appeared to regard the leftist underground armies as stronger and more dangerous the nco-Pascist groups. In his report, he deplored that it was impossible in Italy at present to disband extremist militant movements "on the basis of administrative powers, as it is, conversely, now possible in France." and suggested new legislation to curh their activities and further growth.

Neither the prefect of Milan nor the Ministry of the Interior, which supervises the prefects of Italy's 94 provinces and controls the police, have denied that the report was actually made. It appears to have been sent to Rome through official channels and under such secority precautions as double envelopes just before Christmas. There is murh speculation as to how the document found its way to the rightist press and why this happened fust now. Spokesmen for the Socialist party, which participates in Premier Emilio Colombo's centerleft government, and for the Communist party, which opposes the government, are pressing for a complete investigation into the leak. The two leftist forces allege that the disclosure of the secret report was timed to divert attention from neo-Facist plots that are now under investigation by the judiciary. The leftist spokesmen are also harshly critical of the Milan prefect because of his avaluation of extremist dangers.

The disorders began in Milan when the polica dispersed a crowd that had gathered for an anti-Marxist parade. The proposed rightist demonstrations had been banned after local offices of the Communist and Socialist parties were bombed by unidentified terrorists, believed to be neo-Pascists, Friday night.

From a small village half a mile from Meherpur, occasional mertars and short bursts of rifle fire could be heard, but the handful of East Pakistan Rifle soldiers still around said that no one was manning defensive positions in the town. It appeared that the advancing Pakistan Army was firing the mortar shells to make sure that all defenders had time to flee. Three armed soldiers passing through the small village seemed to have remained more to watch than to fight. As the mortar rounds fell slightly nearer, they plled into a truck with a dozen civilians and drove toward India Most of their comrades were already in India early this morning before a shot was fired at

appeared to be taking care of about 200 East Pakistan riflemen. Tents had been pitched in front of the Indian base's main gate and a dozen assorted jeeps and Land Rovers flying the Bangla Desh (Bengal Nation) flag were parked in the yard. Many of the East Pakistan riflemen had removed their identifying insignia. An Indian officer refused to ex-

In these provinces, almost no defensive measures were taken during the war's first ten days when the rebels were almost unmolested in all the major towns. Israeli diplomats quickly seized upon one point in the announce-ment, the union's "basic principle" "no peace, no negotiation" with Israel seemingly irreconcilable with Egyptian President Anwar el-Sadat's offer on Feb. 15 to "make peecc" with Israel.

Since the cntire peacemaking effort in recent weeks has been based on that statement, made formally to United Nations envoy Gunnar V. Jarring, there seemed good likelihood that Israeli diplomats would ask Mr. Jarring whether Mr. Sadat's offer still Analysts noted that, under the arrangements announced, foreign policy decisions could be taken by majority vote-meaning that Egypt could be outvoted on any agreement with Israel by Libya and Syria, both countries having expressed far more rigid hostility to Israel than Egypt or Jordan. Since the Arab union is not scheduled to come into effect until Sept. 1, at the earliest, there was even speculation that this date could become a new deadline for the peacemaking effort. Inscrutable Mr. Helms Works to Restore CIA's Image

By Benjamin Welles

WASHINGTON (NYT).—"I can teli when ha walks in the door what sort of a day it's been," says his wife, Cynthia. "Some days he has on what I call his 'Oriental look'-totally inscrutable. I know better than to ask what's happened. He'll talk when he's ready. not before, but even when he talks he's terribly discreet."

The director of the Central Intelligence Agency, Richard Helms, apparently brings his problems home from the office like any other husband—at least to hear Cynthia Helms tell it. And these days Mr. Helm's job is definitely one of the most problem-ridden in Washington. Successive budget outs, balanceof-payments restrictions, bureaucratic rivalries and press disclosures that have hurt the CIA's public image have all reduced its operations considerably. President Nixon has recently ordered a fiscal and management investigation into the intelligence "community," a task which may take longer and prove more difficult than even Mr. Nixon sus-pects because of the capacity of in the bureaucratic thickets.

Cold-War Necessity

Both Mr. Nixon and his principal foreign affairs adviser, Henry Kissinger, are said to regard the community as a mixed blessing; intrinsically important to the United States but far too big and too prone to obscure differences of opinion-or, sometimes, no opinion-behind screen of words.

Considered a cold-blooded necessity in the cold-war days, the agency now seems to many liberal intellectuals and congressmen to be undemocratic, conspiratorial, ainister. The revelations in recent years that have made the agency suspect include its activities in Southeast Asia, the Congo and Guatemala; the Bay of Pigs; the U-2 flights over Russia; Its secret funding through "front" foundations of the National Student Association plus private cultural, wo-men's and lawyers' groups, and, finally, two years ago, the Green Berets affair.

Mr. Helms knows all this better than most. As the first career intelligence officer to reach the top since the CIA was created in 1947, the 58-year-old official'a goal has been to professionalize the agency and restore it to respectability. In fact, one of his chief preoccupations has been to erase the image of the director as a man who moves in lavish mystery. If Mr. Helms rules an "invisible empire," as the CIA has sometimes been called, he is a very visible emperor. While he tries to keep his lunches free for work, for example, he occasionally shows up at a restaurant with a friend for lunch: a light beer, a cold plate, one eye always on the clock.

He likes the company of attractive women-young or oldand they find him a charming dinner partner and a good dancer. Some of his critics complain that he is too close to the presseven though most agree that he uses it with rare finesse for his

David Rockefeller Optimistic on Mideast

By Philip Greer NEW YORK, April 18 (WP).— The political climate in the Middle East is "more conducive to peace than at any time since the sixday war," according to an international banker recently returned from the strife-torn area.

David Rockefeller chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank, who met with heads of state in Israei. Jordan, Egypt and Lebanon last month during a round-the-world tour, said in an interview that he found clear signs that both the Arab and Israeli sides have moderated their positions and that steps toward peace could begin with an agreement on reopening tha Suez Canal

'I found more willingness to consider that than anything else." hs said. "Neither side put their foot down."

Among the recent developments that indicate a letup in Arab-Israeli passions, Mr. Rockefeller noted that, at the recently concluded Tehran oil negotiations. Iraq for the first tima was willing to accept the leadership of another country. Iran. "And in the middle of the talks, Syria made a deal and reopeoed the oil pipeline that had been shut down for about nine months," he said. Mr. Rockefeller conceded that strident nationalism on both sides is still very much in evidence. However, he said, Arab countries and the Israelis indicated that they are anxious to ease the tensions in the area.

The rebels had anriounced several moves of their provisional capital as they gave up town after town. These capitals were provisional because Dacca was to be the capital after Bangla Desh forces liberated it. Meherpur was the capital as recently as Friday, according to Bengali resistance officials. However, the provisional government leaders apparently were not willing to risk visiting Meherpur yesterday when they held their formal installation ceremony for the benefit of the press. PEKING SIGHTSEERS-Members of the U.S. table tennis group that visited Communist China last week are seen at the Great Wall near the Chinese capital. U.S. Table Tennis Team Quits China After Historic Tour

By Ian Stewart

HONG KONG, April 18 (NYT). The American table tennis team crossed from Communist China into Hong Kong yesterday, ending its historic week-long visit that bridged a 22-year-old barrier between the United States and mainland China.

Members of the team began returning to the United States today from Tokyo. The group arrived in Tokyo last night from The team had been invited by Chinese officials at the World Table Tennis Championships in Nagoya, Japan. The invitation to the team, and the later granting of visas to four American journalists, signaled a significant shift in Chinese policy toward the United States. One of the newsmen, Tillman Durdin of The New York Times, has been granted a month's visa. The other three correspondents were permitted to stay on in Canton over the weekend despite the departure of the American team, whose visit was the osten-sible purpose for the presence of tha American newsmen in China,

The 15 players and officials looked weary after their exhausting three-city tour, but waved at newsmen gathered at the border to meet them. The Chinese bava been sensitive in recent years to people taking pictures at the border, but Communist border guards took no notice of the array of :television and still cameras yesterday. Members of the team could be seen taking pictures of the Chi-nese guards before they crossed into Hong Kong.

The team walked over the rallroad bridge that spans the Shumchun River and is the main crossing point between Hong Kong and China. Some of the returning Americans wore badges imprinted with the picture of Chairman Mao Tse-tung. Team members had nothing but praise for the hospitality of their bosts, but said they found their schedule had been tiring. But all agreed that the tour was a great success.

Speaking to newsmen on the British side of the border, Graham Steenhoven, leader of the group and president of the United States Table Tennis Association, said the Chinese were a "warm. gracious, friendly people."

A Crowded Look at Shanghai, China's Proletarian Capital

view from one of this city's tall huildings makes it easy to accept the official statement that Shanghai is the premier industrial city of China.

In every direction as far as the eye can see factory chimnevs rise. The smoke they emit hangs to a murky smog, reminiscent of New York and other major cities.

On the streets everyone seems a worker, and in their frumpy blue-clad millions, they swarm in such numbers that they overflow sidewalks and almost choke the roadways. It is fortunate there is little traffic in the city. only the plying of motor and electric trolley huses, for there would not be enough epace for both pedestrians and even a moderate number of private motor cars.

What private transportation there is comes in the form of the ubiquitous hicycle, not yet motorized as in many other developing Asian pations, and they vie in formidable battalions with the press of pedestrians.
Officials here during a cursory briefing today for visiting Western newspapermen, stated the population of the city proper as 6 million. A suburban area administered as part of the city takes in an area of 3,600 square miles, four times the size of the inner city itself, and encompasses ten counties and 4 million more Thus, Shanghai is by far

China's largest city, with its to-tal of 10 million outstripping Peking's 7 million for inner city aud rural environs. · Heavy Industry's Part

Before the Communist takeover of China, Shanghai already had an extensive concentration of light industries and the beginnings of heavy industry. Officials here today pointed out

Shanghal of the '20s

In its heyday of the 1930s, Shanghai was a cosmopolitan metropolis of rushing traffic, hectic pace, bright lights, innumerable pleasure places, ram-pant vice and high intellectualism. There was an enormously wealthy, high-living elite, an emerging middle class and also millions in The city's main downtown street, Nanking Road, scintillated with smart shops, high-rise department stores and worldly people. The city's 100,000-odd Europeans mingled with its Asians without any thought on either side of their being strangers to each other. Today, Shanghai is a proletarian city, obviously full of energy and drive but with little of the shullience and sparkle of old. Bright lights are few on Nanking Road, the shops dowdy, the goods seemingly plentiful but utilitarian.

The atmosphere is provincial where before it was sophisticated and international. The foreigner who strolls down Nanking Road today is stared at as if he wera a man from Mars, and if he pauses he is surrounded by a curious crowd of such density that further progress is difficult. Extent of Johnson's Snooping Is Outlined

By Richard Halloran

WASHINGTON, April 18 (NYT1.—Documents indicating the extent of the involvement of President Lyndon B. Johnson and his attorney general, Ramsey Clark, in the governmental sur-veillance of political dissidents have been obtained here from government officials.

The documents also show that Joseph A. Califano, who was a special assistant to President Johnson, and Paul H. Nitze, who was the deputy secretary of de-fense, also helped plan the do-mestic intelligence effort at the time of civil disturbances in 1967 and 1968.

According to the documents, meetings were held at the White House and interdepartmental memorandums were exchanged in an effort to increase the flow of information on civil rights activists, black militants and antiwar protesters.

The origin of governmental surveillance practices has become an issue here as a result of a congressional investigation and mounting public debate over federal dossiers on private citizens.

Mr. Clark, informed of the statements and documents connecting him with military and civilian intelligence operations, said: 'That's just not true. I don't care what the documents In response to specific questions, however, he acknowledged that agents of the Federal Burean of Investigation had gathered information on potential and known dissidents.

But he added: "I can tell you that I have no recollection of anyone telling me that military Stanley R. Resor (who is still in office; the under secretary of the Army, David E. McGiffert; and the Army's general counsel. Robert E. Jordan 3d (also still in office).

The FBI and the Army intelligence command were previously known to have been the mainstays of the operations. In addition, the Justice Department's civil rights, community relations, criminal, and internal security divisions, plus the 93 offices of the U.S. attorneys around the nation and the Secret Service con-tributed information and assessments, the sources said.

By January, 1968, the volume of information flowing into tha Justice Department, which was in command of handling civil disturbances, was enough to have Mr. Clark plead with the Army

The part of senior Johnson administration officials in planning the intelligence operations was first indicated by Assistant Secretary of Defense Robert F. Froehike and Assistant Attorney General

Robert Mardian, both political appointees in the Nixon administration, during testimony before a Senate subcommittee last month. The subcommittee has since requested the Defense Department to allow several generals who directed the Army's intelligence effort to testify. It has also ask-ed the Justice Department to furnish memos on its intelligence functions that Mr. Mardian said were written by Mr. Clark. Mr. Califano, in the interview last week, said that the President Mayor Stokes wanted to have plenty of warning in case he had to call up federal troops to dueli a disturbance. He conceded that Mr. Johnson might have personally ordered Army in-telligence into action without telling him but he doubted it.

But sources close to him said that he was considering running as an independent rather than on the party ticket. NEW YORK, April 18 (AP).-One off-duty police patrolman was killed in a gun hattle with another last week in a discotheque as more than 100 panicky patrons scrambled for cover. A bystander was wounded by gunfire:

Police officials said Patrolman James Boyd died after exchanging nine shots with Patrolman Franklin Elcok at the discotheque Thursday. Both were in plain clothes.

The police said they gave this account: Patrolman Boyd got into an argument with an unidentified patron and pulled his gun. Patrolman Elcok drew his own gun and moved in from hehind, saying, "I'm a cop. Drop that Patrolman Boyd turned with his gun still raised and the shooting began. He was hit in the chest and thigh. Ira Herscher. 26, a bystander, hit in both legs with stray shots, was reported in fair condition.

U.S. Army Offers Volunteers European Tour, Other Options

By Dana Adams Schmidt

WASHINGTON, April 18 Army announcement said: "If (NYT).—Army recruiting sergeants are offering this year's high school graduates a likely way to avoid the draft and a trip to Vietnam. It is called "the European option."

It means that if a recruit en-lists in one of the combat arms -infantry, artillery or armored forces-the Army will, if he so requests, guarantee the recruit months in Europe, which would usually mean West Germany. After that, the recruit would have to go where the Army sent him, out it would be a fair camble that the Vietnam war would be over.

To qualify for the option, however, an enlistee must commit himself to at least one more year of service time than a draftee. Enlistments may be for two, three or four-year terms but only the longer terms entitle the enlistees lo exercise options like the Europeau one. Draftees' service terms are two years.

A Department of the Army spokesman said last week that the "European option" went into effect on March 25 and would probably be followed by other geographical options. Part of Revision

The option is part of a general revision of Army recruiting psy-chology. No longer does the recruiting poster point its finger and say, "Uncle Sam Needs You." League Against Peace?

Syria will have, we are told, "one president, one flag, one anthem and one federal capital."

It will also have, apparently, only one policy (apart from the rather vague goal of "democratic socialism"): no peace with

In other respects, the federation plan has been pursued more cautiously, and to that extent with greater hopes for success, than the brief earlier venture under Nasser that gave Egypt its present nama of the United Arab Republic. True, it does include Syria, the rock on which Nasser's plan splitgeographically and politically—divided from the other members. It also fails to include the geographically logical but politically divided Sudan-at least for the present. But in other respects it contains the germ of an ideal that could be of great service to the peoples included in the program, and thus to the Middle East.

But the uncompromising stand on Israel, particularly at a moment when there is at least a faint trace of movement toward some partial settlement, involving, perhaps, the reopening of the Suez Canal and a limited Israeli withdrawal in Sinai, vitiates most of the hope contained in President Sadat's federalism. The danger was always present in the plan: Syrian and Libyan intransigence contrasted from the first with Egyptian overtores toward peace. And the attitude

The new federation of Egypt Libya and of Israel prevented any real movement during the gestation of the federal idea.

Nevertheless, the coalition of Libya's billions of oil dollars with Egypt's millions of people (Syria remains the weakest point in the federation), united in what seems to be a league against peace is a potentially tragic development. Given some stability in the Middle East, it could have been a great force for economic development, from which the whole region might well have benefited. Under the circumstances, it is more likely

There still remains the hope that some formula, such as non-belligerence, will permit the gradual creation of a state of actual peaca. This would certainly be in Egypt's interest; Libya, controlling its own off resources, with direct communication to European markets, has little direct practical concern in events beyond the Suez. And it would be in Israel's interest as well: The new federation, backed by the Soviet Union, might be a much tougher antagonist than the old Arab League, especially since there is growing worry in the United States over Israel's persistent search for an illusory strategic frontier that could be successfully defended—if at all—only with American help. The Arabs are pursuing their own illusions in their league against peace, as they have so often in the past; it is time for both sides to face reality, under whatever formula statesmanship may devise.

Looking In on Vietnam

Seventeen years ago, Vice-President Richard M. Nixon, speaking before the American Society of Newpaper Editors, sent up his famous trial balloon proposing that if necessary American ground troops be employed in Indochina to prevent a Communist take-over there. Seventeen years to the day and 44,000 American deaths later, President Richard M. Nixon, speaking before the American Society of Newspaper Editors, made it clear that American troops will not be totally withdrawn from Indochina until one part of that country-namely, South Vietnamhas developed "the capacity to defend [itself1 against a Communist take-over." Plus ca change. . . .

In his comments Friday night, the President locked himself and the country firmly into the position that "total withdrawal" from Vietnam doesn't really mean total withdrawal until not one but two major conditions are fulfilled. The first of these, always inherent in the "Vietnamization" policy, is that both air power and "some residual forces" will remain engaged in Indochina so long as "the South Vietnamese have not yet developed the capacity to defend themserves, to take over from us the defense of their own country." Even though the President hedged a little by adding at one point, "not the sure capacity, but at least the chance," the implication is plain that he is committing himself at least to the continuation of the air war for the indefinite future...

Who is to judge when the South Vietnamese will in fact have reached the goal of self-sufficiency in their own defense against "a Communist take-over"? For years now -at least since 1967-it has been reported by American military or political authorities that Saigon was on the verge of achieving this capacity; but it is perfectly evident, especially sinca the latest incursion into Laos, that the condition is still far from being met. There has always been a contradiction in the Vietnamization policy between tha actual steady withdrawal of American ground forces and the claimed steady accretion of South Vietnamese power If the United States is going to continue to maintain a "residual force" of whatever size in South Vietnam, and is going to continue to employ air power against the Communist enemy until Saigon's self-sufficiency has been achieved it is difficult to see how we are ending our involvement in the war.

The dilemma is infinitely compounded by the second condition, which the President spelled out in some detail for the first time Friday night. Now the United States is committed to maintaining both residual forces in South Vietnam and the employment of air power until the American prisoners in Hanol's hands are released. There can be no question that the President's concern for the prisoners is deeply felt, as is that of all Americans; nor can there be any question that the North Vietnamese have behaved with callous barbarity in their total handling of the prisoner issue. But to threaten in effect to bomb the prisoners out of North Vietnamese prisons does not seem the most practicable way to ensure the release of the prisoners. On the contrary, it flies in the face of all experience thus far in American efforts to deal with Hanol on this cruel matter, and it could be bitterly counter-productive.

By stating that American air strikes and an American residual (presumably ground) force will continue in Indochina so long as American prisoners are being held by Hanoi. the President is pursuing-doubtless out of sheer exasperation—a course just the reverse of the one that is most likely to restore the prisoners to their homeland and their families. In view of all that has gone before. we do not see how continuation of the war through air power or by any other means will be the "incentive." to use President Nixon's word, leading Hanoi to release tha

The President specifically stated that the "residual force" to which he alluded was not one "such as we have in Korea at the present time" and have had for some 20 years. But it is hard to see how, under the two condltions he spelled out, it will be possible to avold jost such a force and for just such an indefinite period on another slice of the mainland of Asia. Can this really be to American interest? We do not think sonor do we think that it is compatible with a program of "total withdrawal" from Viet-

International Opinion

France and Algeria In the Mediterranean President Pompidou

has been trying to throw off the legacy of Gen. de Gaulle's grandiose concepts. France fears losing its dominant position in Algeria to the Soviet Union, but it is hard to see Algeria settling for another form of domination. Frauce has spoken of North Africa from Egypt westward as presenting the soft underbelly of Europe.

President Boumedienne has called-consistenly, if overoptimistically—for the removal of both American and Soviet fleets from the area. But to take an analogy from the Far East, it was President Nixon who responded directly to China's people-to-people initiative. In the same way, Algeria's recent conclusion of a vast 25-year gas agreement with the United States represents some improvement in relations-whatever public statements are made over the American role in the Middle East.

China and the U.S.

It is certain that "a page has been turned," as Chon readily admitted. The next pages will not be turned so easily. Nixon is probably ready to accept an arrangement, even one that would entail some loss of face for Chiang Kai-shek, but certainly not to surrender 14 million Formosans to Peking as a reconciliation gift.

WASHINGTON.—In the capital these days, nothing fundamental has changed, but everybody senses that change is com-The problems, the headlines, the arguments and the cast of characters are all the same, but the deeper tendeocles or trends of events are a little different.

Not so long ago the talk here was about the danger of Chine entering the Vietnam war, the Israelis being pushed into the Mediterranean, the Russians and Chinese fighting in Asia, tha American economy plunging toward a depression, the militaut students and blacks burning cities and tossing deans out of second-story windows. Now President Nixon is crack-ink jokes with editors, of all people, and talking about Ping-Pong aod even about visiting China; the trend is down, if not out, in Vletnam, the prospects of a limited Arab-Israeli agreement to open the Suez Canal are better: the first-quarter statistics oo the economy and the stock market are encouraging, if not satisfactory, and well-informed characters here are discussing, not if Britain will get lute the Common Market, or if the United States will get out of Vietnam, or if Chiua will get into the United Nations, but when.

Well, talk is cheap, and as usual too much is being made of these glimmering hopes by the wishful thinkers, but the atmosphere of politics means something. The President sticks to his familiar rhetoric and in some ways talks his way tighter into corners, but he is at least watching the trend of public opinion and recognizing that the anti-war movement, the environmental movement, inflation, unemploy-ment and China are facts that can't be ignored.

A Fantasy

Of course, uone of this is satisfactory to those who want the war, the recession, the inequality and the general cussedness of mankind to end overnight. For every move Mr. Nixon makes toward peace or John Maynard Keynes, he feels obliged to shake bis fist at Hanoi and praise Adam Smith and the free market.

Accordingly, there is a kind of faotasy about the world of Washington these days. Words and actions seem to have little connection with each other. It is directly related to the growing demands in the United States, as evidenced in the latest Gallup poll, to further cut the Pentagon's appropriations. In spite of these Soviet game.

The struggle in Washington is soon to heat up as Senate consideration begins on this year's appropriation for going forward with the next phase of the Safeguard ABM system. It comes at a time when Moscow is pressing for an "ABM-only" agreement at the strategic arms limitation talks (SALT)

There have been notable achievements among the white population, which is equivalent only to that of any of half a dozen Latin-American cities: development of a new uraniumenrichment process, techniques of beart surgery, exceptional athletic feats. Hitherto, errors of South African polities have tended to be corrected by triumphs of South African economics assisted by this land's enormous mineral wealth: gold, diamonds, platinum, uranium, coal, manganese, asbestos, chrome etceters. Competent production processes and an epormous pool of cheap nonwhite labor helped constant growth.

But this is faltering. The old Teutonic efficiency of the Afrikaners is disappearing. Incapable poor whites keep jobs that any competitive society would award to better-qualified blacks. South Africans can now boast an as-toundingly high train-accident rate and often wait two years to get a telephone installed. The population of perhaps "You just can't prevent 80 percent of the people from doing what they are capable of doing. We will stagnate evenis approaching the hour of tually unless there is a change."

White children get free education; black children pay. Yet the government, in its insistence on giving nonwhites some share of the national development, is creating an educated black majority. in a society neither free nor equal. nor fraternal.

The result is increased bitterness. African intellectuals are developing a black consumers movement. Black students have broken away from the National Students Union to form their own organization. Theirs is not yet a black leadership class but its forerunners are discernible.

Resentment among an increasingly educated black population combined with industrial need for its skilled labor stokes the furusces of trouble. Ahe Bloom-berg, leader of the so-called colored community, said last year: Never in the history of our comtry has there been a more histor and more heatile feeling against the government and the whitepeople generally,"

One can easily understand the grim determination of the whites deminated by the hardy Africances, to hang on to the favored position for which their amesions fought. And they knew this position would vanish if they become a political minority in a democracy based on equal rights.

Yet they are caught up in an apparently insolution paradox. apparently insoluble paradox Apartheid indice the anger of all

Nixon on Abortion

A story in the IHT (April 5) which I find every bit as disturbing as President Nixon granting a "house pardon" to Lt. Calley, is his action vetoing a recent ruling of the Pentagon (an institution not noted for doing much right these days) allowing abortions to be performed in military hospitals, Mr. Nixon justified his action by stating that abortions whether unrestricted or on demand wera against his "personal and religious beliefs," He further states that he does not regard abortion as a viable method of controlling the population explosion. One can only couclide that the President considers My Lai as a better solu-

Frankly, I resent the President's use of his "personal and religious beliefs" to counteract mine. Whether or not a woman, as an individual, chooses to have an abortion should have nothing to do with President Nixon's moral or religious scruples.

I am ashamed as an American that my President prefers to put politics ahead of humaneness. I further resent that, as an American living overseas, I cannot register my anger and discontent

Study Finds Age 3 Too Late to Help Deprived Child Catch Up

By Jonathan C. Randal

ERUSALEM (WP).—A study of indicates that even the most intensive educational effort starting at the age of 3 fails to achieve effective integration of the culturally deprived. The study further suggests that a home environment—largely in the relationship between the mother and child, that impedes the child's healthy emotional and intellectual development.

Financed by the U.S. Depart-ment of Health, Education and Welfare and the Israeli Ministry of Education, the research project is now in the final stages of assessment before publication of the findings.

Implications

The study seems to show that compensatory nursery schooling is not enough to break the cycle of deprivation and indicates the need for revolutionary and costly programs to educate mothers from culturally deprived back-

The findings are disquieting in an immigrant country like Israel, conclusion that even with 4 and which believes its very existence is at stake; More than half of Israeli nursery school children its citizens are "Oriental" Jews, many of whom come from culturally deprived backgrounds in the Middle East and North Africa. The implications are also distressing for Americans hoping to use formal education to raise cultural deprivation is rooted in the level of culturally deprived minority groups.

> Preliminary results of the study challenge basic American assumptions that much of the cultural lag among black children is due to poverty, racial discrimination and broken homes in which the father is absent. In contrast to the United States, where business is a contender, the welleducated families involved in the study cooperated enthusiastically in an integrated school. No wide economic gap existed between them and the less privileged families because of the egalitarian nature of Israeli society and the leveling effects of the highest tax burden in the world. Broken homes were not a factor in either

DOWN HERE WHEN THE

5-year-olds the cultural gap was already too large for successful integration. Therefore, the research team chose 3-year-olds for the formal research program in 1967 to 1969.

Administered by the Hebrew University's education department and led by psychologist Sylvia Krown and Dr. Dina Feitelson, the study involved four groups of children. In three groups, two-thirds of the children came from families of "Western" background with at least one university-educated parent and a father either self-employed or working in a business or profession. The "Oriental" parents of the other third had no more than elementary school educations, and the father worked in a manual job. Both first and second-generation families were represented in this

A fourth group was made up of children from uniformly culturally deprived backgrounds. Mrs, Krown describes in detail the compensatory methods employed for the project in a book, to be published soon, that site wrote for the Israeli Ministry of the nature of the cultural gap at the 3-year-old level and discusses differences in home background.

The Classes

Two teachers were assigned to each class, reduced in size from the standard 35 or 40 tn 24 stucents. Teachers attended a special summer seminar on teaching methods, premised on Mrs. Krown's belief that cultural deprivation is as much an emotional as an intellectual problem.

From the beginning of the school year, the "Western" children were, for the most part, delighted with school and open in their relations with the teacherz They played freely, told stories, asked questions, grasped space and distance problems, expressed themselves imaginatively and fought for their possessions.

The "deprived" children were often apathetic and seemingly disinterested loners. They did not know how to play with others. They were often withdrawn and susplcious, seldom spoke to each other or answered questions and pulled at the teacher'e skirts rather than addressing ber when they wanted attention.

Perhaps because they came from overcrowded homes, many of the children lived in constant fear of being yelled at or beaten. Their concern was how to take care of themselves in a hostile world: they had little energy left over for playing or make-believe. Rarely did they fight for their possessions, preferring to give up their claims meekly.

In order to help the children overcome their lack of identity and individuality, mirrors were installed in the classrooms and individual photographs were pasted into the children's cubby holes. It was discovered that many were able to recognize their playmates' photographs, but not their own.

The Homes

To better understand why the "deprived" children were slow in developing, the researchers turned to their homes. Their mothers. in contrast to mothers of the "privileged" children, were reticent, simply delivered their children to school and went away. But the "privileged" mothers shared information with teachers and during the first weeks of school stayed with their children at the start of school.

The behavior of the "deprived" mothers was symptomatic of their failure to see their role as emotional as well as physical protector of their child.

In many "deprived" homes, first priority was given to television sets, washing machines and other consumer goods. There were few books and what toys did exist. were cheap and broke easily. The researchers called these homes "parent rather than child-orient-

Many "deprived" mothers failed to understand that love and praise were as important to a child as food and shelter. Seldom did parents, who themselves were not verbally communicative, tell their children stories.

Frequently saddled with large families, these mothers often put a premium on cleanliness and nished the children to the street so they wouldn't dirty the premises. Children were expected to obey and conform. The paren's also tended to blame ontside forces beyond their control for their children's behavior. During an interview. Mrs.

Krown, a graduate of New York's Bank Street College of Educa-tion, recalled an incident in which a "deprived" infant twice fell off his bed during a researcher's visit to the home. "This child has no luck," the mother said, revealing her basic fatalism toward life and her fatiure to see her role as her child's protector.

In many "deprived" homes, there was often little sense of time with no set pattern for meals, going to bed or getting up Such lack of time sense made difficult for children to develop a feeling of natural order, which in turn led to problems in logical thinking

Despite such basic disadvantages, the "deprived" children did enefit from the experimentthe intensive care paradoxically widened the gap between them and their "Western" playmates, who made even greater progress. And, despite all efforts at integration, most of the "deprived" children continued to operate solely within their own group.

Mrs. Krown does feel, however, that none of the children in the program will ever again be dull and lethargic, "They have been aroused they show initiative they're more outgoing and verbal," she that all those two years of experience will have gone to waste."

In light of the findings, she believes that "deprived" mothers must learn how to relate meaningfully to others before they can relate meaningfully to their own children. She would like to see more intensive teacher training and more nurses, community and social workers who would work with mothers or even with mothers-to-be. But the costs would be

Other observers point out that women in the Israeli Army could help during their 20 months of service and that "Oriental" girls in the army could be taught how to deal with the problems of raising children.

But, at present, the army takes only girls who have completed ten years of schooling, thus, eliminating most of the poorly educated "Oriental" girls who stand to gain most from such obligatory training. Moreover, many "Oriental" girls come from orthodox families and are granted exemptions on religious

AT THE BAY OF PIGS BEFORE THE INVASION ...

Yet, if he gives the appearance nf insouciance—he is witty, gregarious and friendly - the reserve is there, like a highvoltage electric barrier, just beneath the surface. Mr. Helms is a mass of apparent contradictions: inwardly self-disciplined and outwardly relaxed. absorbed in the essential yet fascinated by the trivial.

A former foreign correspondent, he observes much and can recall precisely what few American husbands ever note in the first place—what gown each woman wore to a dinner and whose shoulder strap was out of place. Nevertheless, no one is more conscious than Mr. Helms of the strict security laws that designate him the official responsible for setting and enforcing security standards throughout the intel-

Mr. Helms wears three official hats. First, as Director of Central Intelligence (DCI), he is tha senior intelligence adviser to the President and Congress, Second. he is the President's representative (and chairman) on the United States Intelligence Board, a loose conglomeration of agencies handling high-grade intelligence and spending between them more than $4 billion yearly. And third, he is director of the CIA.

In some ways the CIA is the tail that wags the intelligence dog. Under the National Security Act of 1947 which created it, the CIA alona carries out services ligence agencies.

This is its charter for such "black tricks" as the National Security Council may order it to perform, from bugging a diplomat's bedroom to overthrowing a hostile government. Director Helms, in his triple role, assigns data-collection priorities for the community and—in theory screens all intelligence before it passes to the President.

The CIA is only a member. indeed a comparatively small member, of the huge, sprawling, costly complex of agencies represented on the United States Intelligence Board, which includes the Defense Department's Intelligence Agency (DIA:, the State Department'a Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR), the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC), the Federal Burcau of Investigation (FBI) and the Natlonal Security Agency (NSA), which eavesdrops electronically on foreign government broadcast communications.

The intelligenca community's size and spending are, of course, secrets, but competent authorities say tha CIA employs about 15,000 Americans, plus several thousand foreign agents, and spends slightly less than $600 million yearly.

Other Spending

By contrast, according to Robert F. Froehlke, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Administration, the Defense Intelligence Agency spends $2.9 billion yearly. Its code-cracking NSA at Fort Meade, near Baltimore, spends more than $1 billion of this and employs 11,000 persons.

The satellite program, in which the CTA has a voice but not control, is said to spend at least $500 million a year.

In his role as Director of Central Intelligence, Mr. Helms must be constantly prepared to give the President, on short notice, the latest information on what is really happening in such matters as Soviet-Chinese tensions. Soviet naval activities in the Caribbean and arms shipments to the militant Arab states, Arab moves against Israel, Chile's development under its new Marxist government, the latest Russian advances in weaponry and so on.

As chairman of the United States Intelligence Board, Mr. Helms rides herd on an unruly team. His authority over the agencies represented on the board. apart from his own CIA, has never been clearly defined by Congress or by successive presidents, and so his effectiveoess depends chiefly m his nwn competence, patience and tact.

Mr. Helms operates somewhat like a managing editor of a major newspaper or television network, reviewing the overall picture, spotting gaps in the coverage. identifying priorities, assigning tasks and weighing the views of his associates.

Checking Up

The CIA, for example, may have picked up word of suspicious troop movements in the Middle East. Mr. Helms might ask the NSA to listen in to radio communications in the area. Possibly he will call on the FBI to "bug" certain Washington embassies for information, or will request that the Pentagon assign U-2s to provide photographs of the troop zones involved. In April and May, 1967, for instance, the CIA and the DIA reported the possibility of an Arab-Israeli conflict, and both predicted an Israeli victory ln seven days—only one day off. On the other hand, the ceasafire plan between Israel and its Arab opponents, proposed by Secretary of State William P. Rogers on June 19 and suddenly accepted both by Israel and the United Arab Republic a few days before it took effect Aug. 7, 1970, brought about an intelligence breakdown. Mr. Rogers, who pays scant attention to intelligence and wanted political credit for the did not solicit CIA "victory," He and his deputy for Middle Fastern affaira, Joseph Sisco, virtually ignored, almost until the very hour the cease-fire was to begin, the pleas of their own State Department intelligence men for U-2s to provide "baseline photography" that could spot possible violations of the truce. Days were spent prevailing on President Makarios of Cyprus and the British to allow the U-2s to fly round trips over the Suez Canal from British bases in Cyprus, and more days were wasted soothing Israell fears about such missions.

When the flights were finally agreed to, bad weather delayed them further. Ultimately, U-2s satellites began providing proof that the U.S.S.R. and Egypt were violating the cease - fire terms by moving more SAM-2 and SAM-3 missile sites into the standstill zone. But the intelligence was consistently ignored for political reasons: Mr. Rogers and Mr. Sisco were less concerned with violations than with getting a cease-fire under way and maintaining it.

Two Major Tasks

The Central Intelligence Agency itself has two major tasks: to collect intelligence, openly or covertly, and to evaluate it for the President.

The agency's Plans Directorate collects clandestinely and also carries out certain "covert" functions, such as organizing, training and arming anti-Communist guerrillas in Laos. The Intelligence Directorate collects open intelligenca tit monltors foreign broadcasts and interviews American businessmen returning from abroad, but its main task is to evaluate everything from all sources-overt and

The agency not only obtains, analyzes and reports on mountains of information from published sources (there are 20,000 journals published yearly in the on the but also from State and Defense Department attachés, from such "technical" collectors as the spy satellites and, finally, from agents.

A Senate veteran with an intimate knowledge of military atfairs remarked not long ago, "On a clear day we get as much from a satellite as we get from an agent in a year."

To handle this flow of information, the agency has enough analysts on its staff to form a medium-sized university. At least half of them have advanced degrees and a third a doctorate. Their combined specialities cover 281 major fields.

There was a time, if you wanted information on the Turkish railway system, you'd set ont to bribe a Turkish railway official." says Sherman Kent, a Yale professor of history who was recruited by the Office of Strategic Services during World War II. "Now you'd probably find a ten-volume tome in the Library of Congress. The information's where to find it."

Cuban Caves

Using such research techniques, the CIA helped convince President Kennedy that the Russians could not be hiding missies in Cuban caves after the October, 1962, crisis. Ray Cline, then head of the Intelligence Directorate, ficers had located a voluminous file on Cuban caves compiled well before the crisis. When Mr. Kennedy and McGeorge Bundy continued to worry that the Russians might be cheating. Mr. Cline drove to the White House, dumped on the President's desk huge file with photographs. and convinced Mr. Kennedy that there was not a subterranean cavity that the CIA dld not know about. Covert action is generally political and means, in effect, belping friends of the United States abroad, "Sometimes it's subsidizing friendly politicians or parties, or running newspapers, or runwords doing covertly what the State or Defense Departments can't do publicly," explains an authority.

Both covert action and espionage sometimes involve no greater risk than passing funds surreptitiously to a foreign cabinet minister. At other times they involve such commonplaces of the spy's repertoire as eavesdropping. now made more efficient by modern gadgetry, which permits the "bugging" of windowpane ribrations so that speech in a locked room can be overbeard. or even of typewriters, from a distauce, so that in all important United States Embassies abroad there must now be special rooms in which secretaries type topsecret material.

Yet only the agent, especially a key agent in a foreign government, can fill in the gaps. Only be knows what to look for. The amount of Information on Soviet and Chinese military installations gathered by spy satellites and studied daily by photointerpreters is immense, high of-ficials say. But while policymakers must know the Soviet Union's strength, they would rather know its intentions. This, in intelligence jargon, is "humint" -human intelligence—and for this the agent remains invaluable. Among its many tasks, Mr. Helms's Plans Directorate also runs "disinformation"—strategic deception intended to keep the leaderless. Finally emerging as the top man after a power struggle, Mr. Khrushchev sprang on a surprised party the epochai was to rend the movement and promote tha Chinese-Soviet split. Within weeks dissension and confusion spread throughout Communist parties across the world. Some approved, some condemned. Some straddled.

KGB (Soviet secret police) off balance. One of the more successful, if little-known, spying adventures of this sort came after Nikita Khrushchev's celebrated "secret" speech of Feb. 24. 1956, to the 20th Communist party congress in Moscow. Stalin's death three years before had left world Communism

Amending Khrushchev

The speech, as delivered by Mr. Khrushchev, had contained nothing on Soviet foreign policy. It was distributed at strategic spots around the world and for months foreign ministries puzzled over which was the true version.

"Eventually most governments decided that the New York Times version was that which Moscow had "sanitized" for foreign Communist parties, recailed one "They decided that the source. other [the CIA] version, with its damaging references, was the real thing. The Kremlin took a long time living this down."

Global Scope

Despite the global scope of his job. Mr. Helms spends almost all his time in Washington, either in his CIA headquarters at Langley, Va,, or before Congress, to which he is often summoned to brief committees or in the President's "situation ropor." the global communications center in the basement of the White House.

Over the past four years Mr. Helms has worked hard to improve the CIA's standing with Congress, and most informed observers would agree that he has made headway. He is a good witness who tells the "watchdog" committees in Congress everything they want to know and alerts them to coming events.

There are constant rumors that Nixon is about to can Helms and put a Republican in his place," said an experienced Senate staff official not long ago. but I discount these. Helms is great with Congress. He admits when he doesn't know something. He never ites. He tells them 90 percent of what he knows is going on-and he somehow lets them guess the remaining 10 per-

Tall, slender, his hair still dark and only beginning to recede at the temples, Richard Helins gives tha impression of a man totally under control and at case. The open, mobile face is often creased by a broad grin, for Helms has an irreverent, irrepressible sense of humor.

Bounds of Morality

Soore who have known Mr. Helms well consider him a deeply democratic man who is constantly concerned lest his agency's clandestine operations overstep the boundaries of morality. He has said that murder and torture, for instance, cannot be condoned, not only because they are immoral but because they are impractical and unnecessary.

That is what ba told newsmen when the CIA was accused of having a hand in the nurder of a Vietnamese double agent by the Green Berets in 1969, Mr. Helms said that his men had advised the Berets to turn the man over to South Vietnamese police for disposition.

Former Green Beret Robert F. Marasco claimed recently that he had killed the suspect after "a vaguely worded execution order was passed to his superiors in Saigon by a "CIA operative." Mr. Marasco said his anger over the Calley conviction moved him to

World of Privilege

Richard McGarrah Helms was born at St. David's, Pa., into a world of considerable privilege. His maternal grandfather, Gates McGarrah, was a leading international banker, and his father, Herman Helms, was an Alcoa executive who moved his family to Europe in the mid-20s. Mr. Helms spent a formative year at the fashionable Le Rosey school in Switzerland, learning French and German and how to move among young nobility and the scions of international wealth. He also studied in Germany.

Upon the Halms tamily's return to the United States, he entered Williams, graduating in 1935 with an outstanding record. Hc was Phi Beta Kappa, president of his class, editor of the class newspaper—and prophetically—"class politician."

Armed with a liberal-arts degree and two foreign languages, Mr. Helms found a job as a reporter in Europe with the former United Press Ritler was rapidly rising in Germany, and Mr. Helms soon won the commendation of his superiors by obtaining an exclusive interview with the Fuehrer. Relations With Nixon eparation from his first wife, President Nixon, who has known Mr. Helms for some 20 years, is said to respect him, although he treats him in the same arm's-length, bloodless way that he treats most subordinates. Nonvoting Adviser

In any event, Mr. Nixon's citing of Mr. Helms as a close adviser in May only partly explains the true relationship. Mr. Rogers. Mr. Laird and Mr. Kissinger are "policy" advisers; Mr. Helms is not. Mr. Helms is a nonvoting "adviser" to the National Security Council and, through it, to the President, its chief. He carefully

In the USSR, he has abserved, there is no such system. Each intelligence agency reports to its nwn political patron; the KGB to the Communist party chief, Leonid L Brenney, tha Armed Forces Intelligence (GRU) to Defense Minister Andrei A. N.Y. Exchange Advances on Broad Front

corporate profits during 1971. Another noteworthy development last week was the admin-istration's "inflation alert," indicating it opposes a big wage in-crease in this year's steel nego-

There is wide division of opinion among economists and politi-cal factions over the advisability of granting business the liberal ized depreciation rules that the Nixon administration ordered last January or restoring the investment tax credit as suggested in many quarters to obtain a higher level of capital spending by busi-

In effect, the Treasury had authorized a $3 billion annual tax cut for business when it said that equipment might be depreciated 20 percent faster than present rules allow. However, the new rules have not gone into effect, pending a bearing on the subject early next month by the

Commerce Chief In U.S. Endorses Alaska Pipeline

WASHINGTON, April 18 (Reuters).-The controversial trans-Alaska oli pipeline project recelved a boost Friday when Secretary of Commerce Maurice Stans urged an early start on construction. In a letter to Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton-who has to decide whether a government permit should be issued-Mr.

Stans said that studies by his Department of Environmental and Economic Factors led him to conclude that the project should move forward.

Mr. Stans came out against an alternative route through Canada, saying that it would expose three times as much of the northern wilderness to possible environmental complications and would have enormously adverse economic consequences. He said a trans-Canada route would result in the loss of thousands of American jobs. increase the U.S. balance of payments deficit through foreign investment of about $4 billion and result in payment of more than $100 million annually in Canadian taxes.

Accurate descriptive bidding often helps a partnership to reach the best final contract, but it can recoil when the play starts by giving an opponent a blueprint for his operations. This objection is often leveled against the "unusual" two no-trump overcall, used to show minor-suit length when an opponent has slam, having lived up to his repopened the bidding in a major.

This popular bidding gadget helped South to make a highly utation in both the bidding and the play. optimistic slam contract on the diagramed deal, played in the North's bid of three hearts over the unusual two no-trump overcall was discouraging. But South charged on to six hearts, using might be needed. To bid two no-trump when vulnerable. West surely needed reasonable high-card strength, and Cohn decided that his best chance was to play West for the hand he actually held, with a doubleton ace and king of spades originally. At the third trick, South led the heart queen from dummy and finessed successfully. He followed with the key play of ruffing a low spade, and was rewarded when West reluctantly contributed his king. From this point, South was sure of his ground. He ruffed a low club to enter dummy, and discarded his remaining club losers on the queen and jack of spades. Finally, he repeated the trump finesses and made the

DECISION

By Richard Harris, Dutton, 220 pp. $5.95. Reviewed by Roderick MacLeish

No event, nor its motives, nor its purposes appear in exactive the same light to all of its participants. Heraclitus knew Bayh of Indiana felf he couldn't that as a philosophic principle; Washington recognizes it as the cause of debate. Great debates here are clashes between absolutes; the opponents argue their own visions of the cosmos great or noble, a political debate must be a confrontation between the deep convictions of its participants.

One side's lack of that passionate conviction is the central problem of "Decision," Richard Harris's superb, harrowing account of the debate over President Nixon's nominee for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, G. Harrold Carswell, Like all good historians Mr. Harris is blased about the events and people he describes. He is on the side of those Republican and Democratic senators who led the battle to defeat the Carswell nomination. But even if one takes that bias into account, the question remains: Did the President and the Attorney General really have the deep conviction that Carswell was the best possible candidate for a vacant seat on the Court? It is hard to believe that they believed. Even if one dismissed the nominee's racism and his insulting treatment of civil rights lawyers who appeared before his district and Fifth Circuit Appeals courts as the ugly manifestation of an unpleasant political opinion, it was impossible to overlook Carswell's fundamental mediocrity to which even his champion, Sen. Hruska, admitted in one of the funniest gaifes in modern congressional history. Carswell's record of reverses by higher courts was appalling. As, the battle over him proceeded, it became evident that he had misrepresented facts in his testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee. Harris quotes one prominent Republican senator as saying that the nomination of Carswell was Mr. Nixon's vengeance upon the Senate for defeating his previous choice, Judge Clement Haynesworth. The administration played the Carswell nomination as a tactic in the Southern strategy. The South, which had available such great jurists as: John Minor Wisdom and Elbert B. Tuttle, had a right to feel insulted.

The cynicism of the administration gives "Decision" a semisinister quality. Written largely. from the perspective of the Senate, the book portrays the White House as a distant, murk-enshrouded bastion of apper and bridling remorse whose maneuverings are finally cast into the light of common day by their sheer ineptitude, At the time of the Carswell nomination, nobody wanted to fight the President on another Supreme Court nominee. Bad principles, even the winners. The Haynesworth debate had been ignoble and the time after it was one for wound-licking and getting back to serious husiness. Only gradgingly did the leaders of the future battle over Carswell face the growing realization that the nominee was a disaster. They were even more reluctant to

The rest of the Senate moved even more slowly, some members dragging themselves to the anti-Carswell side, some moving to the pro some remaining mysteries until the day of the vote. Mr. Harris's literary genius and it is considerable—lies in his ability to create tension in a story whose end is known to the reader and in his capacity to firing political character alive. He had a profound understanding of how the Senate works and the forcer that inspire and badger its members. Here is Sen. Bizarre things happened, the start in President who had talked so in the much of "strict constructionism" insisted that he had a right to appoint Supreme Court Justices whereas the Constitution, Article II, section 2 says that he shall "nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint In the dark of the night Martin Mitchell called an Arkansas news paper and demanded the cruci-fixion of Sen. It is a book about government gone away with all the illumination that sorrow can bring. On the final morning the White House tried to persuade wavering Republican senators by telling them that the 505 Margaret Chase Smith was going to vote for Carswell. Sen. Smith to vote for Carswell. De Vicenzo Denies He 'Gave' Spanish Golf to South African

BARCELONA, April 18 (UPD.—Dale Hayes, playing his first pro tournament outside of South Africa, yesterday won the $28,559 Spanish Open golf championship in a controversial finish with Roberto de Vicenzo of Argentina, Hayes, 18, won by a stroke after De Vicenzo, at 48 one of the "grand old men of golfing," nonchalantly missed a threefoot putt on the last hole.

"I do not think Roberto tried very hard." Hoyes said afterwards. "Just before my last putt, he walked up to me and said, knock it in, boy-I do not want to play another hole." De Vicenzo denled be "threw" the tournament and the 500,000 pesetas ($7,1401 first prize. "I tried hard to hit that last putt home," he said, "but my putting was awful all the way in. I certainly would have liked a playoff."

Hayes fired a three-under-par 69 yesterday to finish with a 72-hole total of 275, 13 below par on the Royal Prat course. De Vicenzo finished one stroke behind.

When Hayes was asked if he was implying De Vicenzo gave the tournament to him. Hayes said, "He certainly did not seem to try to hole that last putt. But you have to ask him. Anyhow, I think Roberto is the greatest man I know in golf, and the Spanish Open was a wonderful thing for me not just becouse I won but for the privilege of playing three full rounds with Roberto."

Killer of a Show

NEW YORK -About addnight several days ago a man ap-peared on the television screen in the cellar of our house to tell about a killing he had committed. Everybody clse in the house had gone to bed. I mention this because the odd aspect of this whole hack on it. was one watcher's personal reaction to this midnight of television and. in order to convey any sense at all of the peculiarity of the thing. I have to Baker give you a glimpse of my personal situation.

Everybody clse, then, was in bed. What is curious is that it never occurred to me to race upstairs and rouse anyone. Here was a man going on in great detail right there in our cellar about this killing he had performed, yet it seemed no more worth disturbing the house for than if it had been another appearance by Phillis Diller.

It was the "Dick Cavett Show" and it had begun, as usual, with Dick's monologue and a promise of pleasant anesthesia as Dick read off the cast of sbow-hiz people on hand to plug their Various enterprises.

Brian Bedford came first. He is in a play in New York and seemed agreeable. Agreeablity is a virtue at midnight in the cellar, at least in our house. and since there is too little of it most of the time, Brian was a welcome guest,

Dick's next guest was Capt. Bob Marasco. The audience applauded. Capt. Marasco? The name was vaguely familiar. Was it somebody who had just made a new Andy Warhol movie? It was not. Dick said that Capt. Marasco, who lives in Bloomfield, N.J., was a former

A few days before his guest appearance with Dick. Bob had told The New York Times that he had, in fact, killed the Vletnamese who, he said, was a triple espionage agent. Dick quickly filled in his audience on this background, and Bob, who had a lot of poise on camera, began to tell about the killing and about life in the Green Berets. He answered Dick's questions with details which a less fastidious man might have glossed over in his recitation. Yes Bob said, Dick was right. Two shots in the fellow's head. Of course, he had been pumped full of morphine before the shooting, which made it as humanitarian as you could possibly make something as awkward as killing a man, Bob volunteered. Dick looked slightly aghast and held up a shampoo. Brief films were shown to sell con-sumer goods. Then Dick asked about putting the hody in a mail sack and weighting it with tire irons and dumping it from a rowboat into several hundred feet of water in the China Sea. and he asked why Bob thought who knew something unpleasant and said the waters were "sharkinfested." Brian asked how Bob could possibly have done it. Bob said he had what amounted to an official execution order from the CIA, an order to "eliminate with extreme prejudice." Everybody who worked with the CIA knew what that meant, Bob said. He had done it to serve his country.

Paulette Goddard In a Widow's Role

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss PARIS.-Paulette Goddard, the star of many a movie, will he appearing be-fore the cameras this week in a new and unaccustomed role.

Her late husband, Erich Maria Remarque, author of "All Quiet on the Western Front," appointed her executrix of his estate. On Tuesday she will deliver the manuscript of his last novel, "Shadows in Paradise." which he completed just before his death last autumn to his German publishers, the Droemer Verlag, in Munich, at a ceremony that will receive international telerision and newsreel coverage.

Miss Goddard has been spending some time in Paris for fittings at Mme. Gres, who has created a wardrohe for the star's tour of Germany.

"No widon's weeds," explained Miss Goddard over tea at the Plaza-Athènee the other afternoon. "Erich wouldn't have liked that. Pink and white and brown and white dresses and coats to go with them. After the Munich presentation, I tour the Bavarian chateaux and go to Berlin and to Osnabrück, the small town where Erich was horn. The original manuscripts of Erich's books, all of them in longhand, will be deposited in the Osnabrück public library."

"Erich's last book, 'Shadows in Paradise.' is his most personal," said Miss Goddard. "It is based on his first coming to America in 1940. The theme is the theme of all his writings: man's inbumanity to man. It is a frantic cry of protest. In a sense, it is n sequel to his Night 10 Lisbon, continuing the account of exiles n'ho were fortunate enough to get to the United States.

Eight publishing houses in Western lands hought it sight-unseen. The Russians will certainly print it. Erich's books are among the hest sellers in the Soviet Union, but the Russians never pay royalties and, of the other Eastern European countries, only the Yugoslans recognize authors' rights.

"The German publishers will see the manuscript for the first time on Tuesday and then copies will be sent to the others who have purchased it. It is to run serially in the Springer newspaper Die Welt and in the weekly Sonniag. Ralph Mannheim, who translated many of Brecht's plays, is doing the English version, which Harcourt-Brace will bring out in the summer.

Miss Goddard cootinued, "When the American film was shown in Berlin they rioted. Universal, the company that produced it. wanted Erich to go Hollywood and play the lead. He still looked young enough then, but he wanted to write and oot to

"After war was declared to 1939 Erich wanted to go to America, but he had no passport. Joseph Kennedy, then our ambassador in England obtained a visa for him. He went through Ellis Island with the other exiles.

"He had finished a novel on the Nazi persecutions. 'Flotsam.' His American publisher gave him a check as an advance and imited him to lunch the next week to discuss it after an English translation had been prepared. The publisher told him it was too strong and would have to be toned down. Erich tore up the check and found another publisher at once. The movies bought it at once and it was done at once-in 1940-as 'So Ends Our Night' with Fredric March, Margaret Sullavan and Von Stroheim. "All Erich's novels have been made into films and now that the screen rights to 'All Quiet' have reverted to his estate. I have had many offers for a remake. Scott Fitzgerald adepted Three Comrades' for the movies and Erich turned actor after all in the German film of his 'A Time to Live and a Time To Die' and received excellent notices for his performance."

Miss Goddard, who had previously been married to Charlie Chaplin (she is the only actress to have played opposite him in two major films, 'Modern Times' and The Great Dictator) and who was subsequently married to Burgess Meredith, a second marriage that ended in divorce, first met Remarque in a flower shop in Hollywood. 'Later, when I was in New York after the war, I ran into him on Fifth Avenue. 'Will you dine with me at Le Pavilloo oo Fridar?' he asked. I accepted the invitation, but thought he would telephone me to confirm it. He didn't, but I went and we were together for the rest of his life.

"He was very secretive about his work. Re never discussed the book he was writ-ing and he didn't discuss the books he had written. He always wrote with pencils with erasers, correcting as he went along. Then he would revise. He wrote his last book over six times, and so with all the others."

Miss Goddard has oo immediate screen projects.

"I'm somewhat spoiled." she confessed. "Tye heen directed by Chaplin. De Mille and Jean Renoir and I should want 2 director in whom I had great confidence. In acy case. I am a literary representative for the time being. I've also been asked to write my memoirs, but I never shall. I'm too busy living them. By the way, here's a fashioo note for you, an historic one, I introduced hot pants back in the 1940s. Norman Norell designed me a pair of sequin shorts. They—and 1—created a sensation on Hollywood Boulevard."
